Protecting Your Business and Employees From Data Breaches

May 16, 2017

Data breaches are a common headline for businesses these days and there is an increasing need as an employer to prepare and protect your business and employees from falling victim to one. Cyber attackers are regularly targeting human resource and company executives to gain access to personally identifiable information on the business and its employees. Join Dykema privacy and security attorney Joshua Sutin and other leading privacy professionals while they discuss measures that can be taken to prepare, prevent, and protect your business from a data breach. A review of the basics of what laws regulate data protection and what constitutes Protected Health Information, Personally Identifiable Information, and an employer's responsibility to protect employees. This seminar is hosted by Frost Insurance.
