Dykema Launches NextGen Financial Services Report Blog

February 27, 2017

Dykema's nationally recognized Financial Industry Group has announced the release of the NextGen Financial Services Report, a blog that provides thoughtful analysis of the most important issues in the consumer and commercial financial services industry.

The Financial Services Industry has gone through a tremendous amount of regulatory and operational IT change in recent years and, with a new presidential administration, more developments are on the way. Fast-paced changes are also being driven by rapid technology developments, big data, mobile banking/payments, privacy and data security, and social media technologies affecting banks and credit unions. The need for regulatory compliance and financial services industry reporting and monitoring technology will also be essential. NextGen Financial Services Report authors are national thought leaders on many of these developments, including Elizabeth Khalil, member and former federal banking regulator at both the OCC and FDIC, as well as Erin Fonté, member and frequent writer and speaker on issues related to FinTech, mobile payments, and privacy/data security issues.

"The NextGen Financial Services Report will monitor the evolving landscape of the Financial Services Industry, not only to relay the most recent news but also to provide a platform to discuss the potential implications of what might come next," said Todd Gale, financial services litigator and editor of the new blog published by Dykema. "With a growing Financial Industry Group that includes more than 100 attorneys across the U.S., our new blog will be a leading publication for what's around the corner throughout the industry."
